

Synopses for "Parenting Strategies for 7--12 Years old" (LDTD-P2-2016S)

Children of this age group begin to think for themselves, internalize values, integrate moral principles, evaluate parents' teaching, and start to master certain competencies and develop habits. Understanding the developmental milestones of this age group and its implication in the long run will help parents to consciously make time to shape their children worldview, impart timeless values and mindfully cultivation positive habits. Other key tasks for parents who wish to sail through this period with confidence would be to build close parent-child relationship, setting boundaries and building up trust before heading to the teenage years.
